MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Three Filipino women were rescued from a bar in Ivory Coast, West Africa, after being held captive for several months. The women, who were identified as Mary Jane, Mary Rose, and Mary Ann, were rescued by a team of Philippine police and military personnel. They were found in a bar called Ilongga's Bar, which was run by a man named Ilongga. The women were held captive for several months and were forced to work as bar girls. They were rescued after a tip-off from a local source. The women are now being treated at a hospital in Manila.

 The heavy burden she literally had to bear was the weight of her own secrets. For Mary Jane, one of the three women rescued from Ilongga's Bar, the burden was the knowledge that she had been held captive for several months. She had to keep her identity hidden from her family and friends. She had to live with the shame of being a bar girl. She had to deal with the trauma of her captivity. She had to find a way to rebuild her life. She had to face the reality that she was now a free woman, but she was still carrying the weight of her past.

No big news from MS P

By The Staff
 The results of the May 2002 National Survey of the Public's Attitudes Toward the Police (MS P) show that the public's confidence in the police has remained relatively stable. The survey, which was conducted by the U.S. Department of Justice, found that 68 percent of respondents have confidence in the police, down from 70 percent in 2001. However, the survey also found that the public's confidence in the police has increased since 2000, when it was at its lowest point. The survey also found that the public's confidence in the police is highest among those who have been in contact with the police in the past year. The survey results suggest that the public's confidence in the police is a key factor in the effectiveness of law enforcement.

Scientists set up hatchery for sea cucumbers

By [illegible]

Scientists at the University of California, Santa Barbara, have established a hatchery for sea cucumbers, a marine invertebrate that has been the focus of a recent resurgence in the commercial market. The hatchery, located at the Santa Barbara Marine Science Center, is the first of its kind in the United States. It was set up to support research on the biology and ecology of sea cucumbers, as well as to provide a source of healthy, wild-caught specimens for scientific study. The hatchery is a small, rectangular tank filled with seawater, in which the sea cucumbers are kept. The scientists monitor the sea cucumbers closely, ensuring they are healthy and growing well. The hatchery is a significant step in the conservation of sea cucumbers, which have been overfished in the past. The scientists hope that the hatchery will help to restore the sea cucumber population and ensure its sustainability for the future.

Friendlier finance market expected to spur mining ventures

By [illegible]

The mining industry is expected to see a significant increase in investment and activity in the coming years, as the global finance market becomes more friendly to the sector. This is due to a combination of factors, including the growing demand for minerals and metals, the increasing need for infrastructure development, and the improving economic outlook for many developing countries. The mining industry has long been a key source of capital for the global economy, and as the finance market becomes more open and transparent, it is expected to attract even more investment. This will lead to a surge in new mining ventures, as well as the expansion of existing ones. The industry is also expected to see a shift towards more sustainable and environmentally friendly practices, as investors and consumers become more conscious of the impact of mining on the environment. Overall, the mining industry is poised for a period of rapid growth and innovation in the coming years.

Abstract: In a 2 × 2 factorial design, 100 participants were randomly assigned to one of four conditions. The first factor was the type of feedback (no feedback, immediate feedback, and delayed feedback) and the second factor was the type of practice (block practice and random practice). The results showed that the combination of random practice and delayed feedback resulted in the highest performance level. The combination of block practice and immediate feedback resulted in the lowest performance level. The results also showed that the combination of random practice and delayed feedback resulted in the highest transfer of learning. The combination of block practice and immediate feedback resulted in the lowest transfer of learning. The results suggest that random practice and delayed feedback are the most effective conditions for learning and transfer of learning.
